SCHOOL SONG

Written by H L Elvin (1917-1924)

When our ship shall leave the river bank
 Its timbers brave the main
Our port shall gleam through mists of time
 And beckon back again
 Then each adventurer shall feel
 As onward strains the eager keel
From the School besides the church and sea
 The speeding wind of memory.

And some shall picture pounding ball
 On turf of sodden field
And some the flight on fiery pitch
 When grit refused to yield
And some shall think of desk and pen
 And organ-voices heard again
 And laughter ringing merrily
 Adown the aisles of memory.

Here make we then, as old-time men
 The pledge our soul demands
 To build as they, the best we may
 The house not made with hands
 So one with Future and with Past
Our work in School shall live and last
 And through the centuries to be
 Our School shall grow in memory
